

Elisabetta RISI

IULM University

Elisabetta Risi is Research Fellow at IULM University (Milan).

Previously, she obtained a PhD in Information Society from the Bicocca University of Milan. She has been teaching sociology and communication sciences for several years and she carries out research at the Communication, Arts and Media Department at IULM University.

Her current major research interests cover the role of platforms in daily life, the issues of contemporary work, as well as digital and qualitative methods.

She has participated and organised workshops and conferences in various universities and is the author of numerous papers on the relationship between communication practices, subjectivity and social change, as well as on current forms of job insecurity.

Among his most recent publications: Datafied Lives (Vite datificate). Relationships, consumption and work in the platform society (2021), Franco Angeli, Milan; Digital Platforms and Algorithmic Subjectivities (2022), University of Westminster Press, together with Armano E., Briziarelli M.